JUDGES AND SOCIAL MEDIA: PROMISES AND PITFALLS

WEDNESDAY

Social media have become central to social interaction, and judges are no exception. While judges' online presence can help raise awareness of law and defend judicial independence, it also carries risks: personal views, online ties with lawyers or parties, and ex parte communications can threaten impartiality and public trust. Existing ethical rules often appear outdated in addressing these challenges. Through national case studies, this e-seminar will explore policy implications of regulating judges' use of social media.
