Religious Diversity in Children's Media.
Review of a Research Project on the Representation of Religion in Society

Dr. des. Verena Eberhardt

Ludwig-Maximilians-Universität München

Evangelisch-Theologische Fakultät – Religionswissenschaft und Religionsgeschichte

Dealing with religious diversity is the subject of intense public debate. Media aimed at children actively address the topic. Under the premise of portraying diversity, conveying tolerance and overcoming conflicts, numerous books, radio plays, films, games and websites have been created in recent decades that deal with religious diversity. This lecture reflects on a research project that deals with the representation of religious diversity in children's media and explains why the representation of religious diversity needs a fundamental change.
